MAYOR'S MINUTE

Mayor
Rick Roquemore

Citizens of Auburn,

This month we will be holding our City Council meetings in our new Municipal Complex. This provides us many opportunities we did not have in our previous building.

We will be able to hold many more citizens in our meetings so we can have even greater participation in the functioning of our government.

We will be able to continue our endeavor to better make our meetings visible to as many citizens as possible.

We invite ALL citizens of Auburn to attend your City Council meetings and at the appropriate times provide your input on the many goings on in our great little City!

Since we are vacating our City buildings downtown we and the Downtown Development Authority are working diligently to ensure these buildings and our wonderful downtown gets the revitalization it needs and deserves by bringing in amenities to anchor the Whistle Stop Shops and bring more options for shopping and dining to our citizens.

Thank you as always,

RICHARD E. ROQUEMORE-Mayor of Auburn

MARCH

In the land of Calendaria, where the passing of time was marked by the turning of pages on a grand, magical calendar, the month of March held a special significance. It was a time when the last vestiges of winter began to melt away, and the promise of spring danced on the horizon.

As the first day of March dawned, the inhabitants of Calendaria woke to find the world transformed. Snowdrops peeked through the melting snow, their delicate white petals a symbol of hope and renewal. The air was crisp with anticipation, as whispers of warmer days drifted through the streets.

In the heart of Calendaria stood the Great Square, where a magnificent clock tower stood tall, its hands ticking away the moments of time. It was here that the annual March Festival was held, a celebration of the changing seasons and the beginning of new beginnings.

The festivities kicked off with a grand parade, with colorful floats adorned with flowers and ribbons winding their way through the streets. March Hares, the mischievous guardians of the month, darted among the crowds, their laughter filling the air with joy.

In the town square, stalls were set up selling freshly baked pastries and sweet treats, while musicians played merry tunes that had everyone tapping their feet. Children chased each other through fields of daisies, their laughter echoing across the meadows.

But the highlight of the March Festival was the ceremonial planting of the March Tree. Legend had it that whoever planted the first seed of spring would be blessed with good fortune for the rest of the year.

As the sun dipped below the horizon, casting a golden glow over Calendaria, the townsfolk gathered around the Great Square. The Mayor, dressed in robes of green and gold, stood at the center, holding a small sapling in his hands.

With a solemn expression, he lowered the sapling into the freshly turned earth, murmuring ancient words of blessing. As he stepped back, a gentle breeze swept through the square, causing the branches of the March Tree to sway in the twilight.

The people of Calendaria watched in awe as the first buds of spring began to unfurl, their colors bursting forth like fireworks against the evening sky. It was a moment of magic and wonder, a reminder that even in the darkest of times, there was always the promise of renewal.

And so, as the month of March came to a close, the people of Calendaria looked forward to the days ahead, knowing that with each passing moment, they were one step closer to the warmth and beauty of spring.
